Finish the Battery Change Before Leaving the Table - working notes

One situation. Clear facts. An honest next step.

Keep button and coin batteries away from children, secure the product's battery compartment and immediately secure removed cells for appropriate collection. A used battery left on the table is still an unfinished adult task.

Hypothetical example: The remote works, but the old coin battery remains beside a cup. The adult secures it for collection and checks the work surface before leaving.

01 Choose a work setup that keeps children away from loose cells

Prepare an adult-controlled replacement area and secure loose cells.

Product or task

Child-access prevention

Replacement instructions location

02 Check the compartment before returning the product

Check the actual product instructions and compartment condition.

Compartment condition

Required closure checked

Repair or removal question

Finish the Battery Change Before Leaving the Table - working notes / Review & follow-through

03 Give the removed battery an immediate next place

Secure the removed battery and confirm its collection route.

Used-cell securing step

Local collection route

Responsible adult and next handoff

04 Review the whole replacement, not just the working remote

Review the work surface and keep urgent exposure guidance available.

Work-area finish check

Urgent guidance availability

Process correction for next change