Shared Interest and Separate Boundaries Plan

Shared interest can keep individual boundaries.

Nobody needs exclusive ownership of a hobby to have a distinct place in the family.

Hypothetical example: Two siblings try drawing with separately permitted materials; one private sketchbook and an existing lesson time stay protected.

01 Separate an interest from a possession

Name the shared interest and each child's actual request.

Activity both children mention

Established learner's specific concern

New learner's requested first try

02 Give each concern its own answer

Protect personal belongings and existing arrangements.

Personal item needing permission

Existing time or project to preserve

Shared resource actually available

Shared Interest and Separate Boundaries Plan / Review & follow-through

03 Refuse to turn the first attempts into rankings

Plan a feasible first try without a sibling ranking.

Suitable task and materials

Help both children agree to

Comparison the parent will stop

04 Make belonging larger than a label

Review boundaries and next choices separately.

What each child actually tried

Boundary that needs adjustment

Separate next decision for each child
